Synopsis

Looking for Marco Polo is a 2006 documentary film by Martin Scorsese about the Italian explorer Marco Polo and his travels to Asia. The film follows Polo's journey from Venice to China and his experiences along the way.

The film opens with Polo as an old man, dictating his memoirs to a scribe. He tells the story of his journey, beginning with his departure from Venice in 1271. Polo traveled with his father and uncle, Niccolò and Maffeo, and they crossed the Silk Road, visiting many cities and cultures along the way.

In China, Polo met with the Mongol emperor Kublai Khan. He spent 17 years in Kublai Khan's court, and he became a trusted advisor to the emperor. Polo learned about Chinese culture and customs, and he witnessed the Mongol conquest of China.

Polo eventually returned to Venice in 1295, and he wrote a book about his travels. His book was a bestseller, and it inspired many future explorers.
