The Carpathian Mountains

The Carpathian Mountains are the third-longest mountain range in Europe, after the Alps and the Pyrenees. They stretch for over 1,500 kilometers (930 miles) from the Czech Republic in the west to Romania in the east.

The range is divided into three main sections: the Western Carpathians, the Eastern Carpathians, and the Southern Carpathians.

The Carpathian Mountains are home to a wide variety of landscapes, including forests, meadows, lakes, and mountains. The highest peak in the range is Mount Gerlachovský štít in Slovakia, which has an elevation of 2,655 meters (8,711 feet).

Trekking and Walking in the Carpathian Mountains

The Carpathian Mountains offer a wide variety of trekking and walking opportunities. There are trails for all levels of fitness, from gentle strolls through forests to challenging climbs to high summits. Some of the most popular trekking routes in the Carpathian Mountains include:

- The High Tatras Trek: This trek takes you through the stunning High Tatras Mountains in Slovakia. The trail is well-marked and offers a variety of scenery, including forests, meadows, lakes, and mountains.
- The Transylvanian Alps Trek: This trek takes you through the remote and beautiful Transylvanian Alps in Romania. The trail is less well-marked than the High Tatras Trek, but it offers a more challenging and rewarding experience.
- The Carpathian Crest Trail: This long-distance trail follows the crest of the Carpathian Mountains from the Czech Republic to Romania. The trail is challenging, but it offers stunning views of the surrounding mountains.

The Cicerone Trekking Guides

The Cicerone Trekking Guides are a series of guidebooks that provide detailed information on the best trekking and walking routes in the Carpathian Mountains. The guides are written by experienced trekkers and walkers, and they offer a wealth of information on the trails, the terrain, and the surrounding area.
